

ONLINE OUTREACH:

R Sinduja (BT 2nd year)

Well, upon browsing through the past events including Techception, there was something that was missing which limited the reach across people.

POST SUGGESTIONS:

- 1) To begin with, if there's a tech event that's planned that's to the reach of our college people only, we should have an extremely active Design team that can come up with posters and posts overnight.
- 2) The post can be in accordance with the latest trending styles which makes it a sort of "crowd puller", this helps us grab a larger audience and bigger team of people with varied interests. They may at least register for the event because of the common liking.
- 3) The major thing to be seen is that the Instagram account should be very active, we should post more often and not only like 3 days or 1 week before the event.
- 4) Even if we are unsure of the event, as in, if it's not yet finalised, we could put teasers saying wait and watch, or surprise reveal.
- 5) Upon posting such surprise reveal teasers, we could do the event launch offline at college and later on post it in the insta handle, this in that case keeps the audience having an eye more frequently on the event, which makes them remember about this event and register for them.
- 6) Posting on social media is extremely necessary. The account should not lay dull until before the event but instead, even random posts like, "next event cooking" makes the page and the committee more active.
- 7) Additional suggestion, if we do the reveal offline after launching teasers online, we should do it in places like near Idea Fac, Hut Cafe, etc because that is the place where you can find a lot of people unlike places near indoor, etc.

REEL SUGGESTIONS:

- 1) Well, editing reels is pretty hard and time consuming, posting reels once in a while is totally doable and less hard on the editor.
- 2) In a reel, the first 3 seconds should essentially have the message as to what is the reason for this event, like what's the output one can expect from the event. Using catchy phrases like- "Wanna be the best tech expert?", etc.
- 3) This attracts people far more than what you expect, it in fact makes more people register for the event and even follow up on it because the starting catchy lines is all that matters.
- 4) For the next 2 to 3 seconds, the logo of the club organising it should be displayed because knowing the club matters a lot.
- 5) The last 6-7 seconds is enough to talk about the event name, here Techception, and the rules and date, time etc.
- 6) Posting a reel once a week, making the team stay active matters a lot.

This primarily would make an event like Techception to stand out also making it an extreme crowd pulling event and sensational making it a grand success.

Thank you.
